PRESENTER: Cutcha Risling Baldy

“Indigenous Women Know How to Save the World: Framing a California Indigenous Ecofeminist Ethic”

This talk builds a California Indigenous ecofeminist ethic grounded in place, fugitivity, resistance, and humor. It asks what it means to rethink how we talk about climate change and to recognize how land, water, and more than human relatives model resilience, refusal, and justice. By examining examples from California such as the damming, diversion, and even paving over of rivers, this talk argues that environmental devastation is not a future fear but an ongoing history that Indigenous peoples have survived and theorized for generations. Green colonialism, conservation land grabs, and the expectation that Indigenous communities must solve climate change while contributing the least to it exposes the absurdity and gaslighting in contemporary environmental discourse and policy. At the same time, Indigenous women who have long been leaders in ecological knowledge and restoration are kept busy navigating patriarchal structures rather than being supported as the scientific and cultural leaders they already are. Ultimately, this talk explores how the world around us is already feminist, already resistant, and already offering models for collective thriving beyond capitalism, patriarchy, and extraction. Indigenous peoples carry structures and methodologies that are sustainable, relational, and deeply grounded in place. We have lived them. And we are still building these futures now.

Dr. Cutcha Risling Baldy is an Associate Professor of Native American Studies at Cal Poly Humboldt who researches Indigenous feminisms, California Indians, Environmental Justice, Traditional Ecological Knowledge and decolonization. She is the Co-Director of the NAS Rou Dalagurr Food Sovereignty Lab & Traditional Ecological Knowledges Institute where she leads several research projects focused on the resurgence of Indigenous Science and place-based learning. In 2025 Dr. Risling Baldy along with Co-Director Dr. Kaitlin Reed were awarded the James Irvine Foundation Leadership Award for their work with the lab. Dr. Risling Baldy is the Principal Investigator for the “Food for Indigenous Futures Project” which looks at connections between food justice, food sovereignty, mental health, and substance abuse prevention for Native American Youth. She has also helped organize several community-facing events like the Northern California #LandBack Symposium, the Water Advocacy & Water Protectors Certificate Program, the Humboldt Indigenous Foods Festival, and the California Indian Conference. Dr. Risling Baldy is also the Program Coordinator for the Master of Social Science in Environment & Community. Her book: We Are Dancing for You: Native Feminisms and the Revitalization of Women’s Coming-of-Age Ceremonies received “Best First Book in Native American and Indigenous Studies” at the 2019 Native American Indigenous Studies Association Conference. The book uses a framework of Native Feminisms to locate revitalization within a broad context of decolonizing praxis and considers how this renaissance of women’s coming-of-age ceremonies confounds ethnographic depictions of Native women; challenges anthropological theories about menstruation, gender, and coming-of-age; and addresses gender inequality and gender violence within Native communities. The book is available with the University of Washington Press. She received her PhD in Native American Studies at UC Davis; her MFA in Creative Writing from San Diego State University; and her BA in Psychology with a Specialization in Health and Development from Stanford University. In 2007, Dr. Risling Baldy co-founded the Native Women’s Collective, a nonprofit organization that supports the continued revitalization of Native American arts and culture. She is Hupa, Karuk, and Yurok and enrolled in the Hoopa Valley Tribe.

Acknowledgements

Thinking Gender 2026: “Feminist and Queer Ecologies” would not have been possible without the valuable input and contributions of our generous co-sponsors, faculty moderators, participating scholars, and the Thinking Gender 2026 Planning Committee.

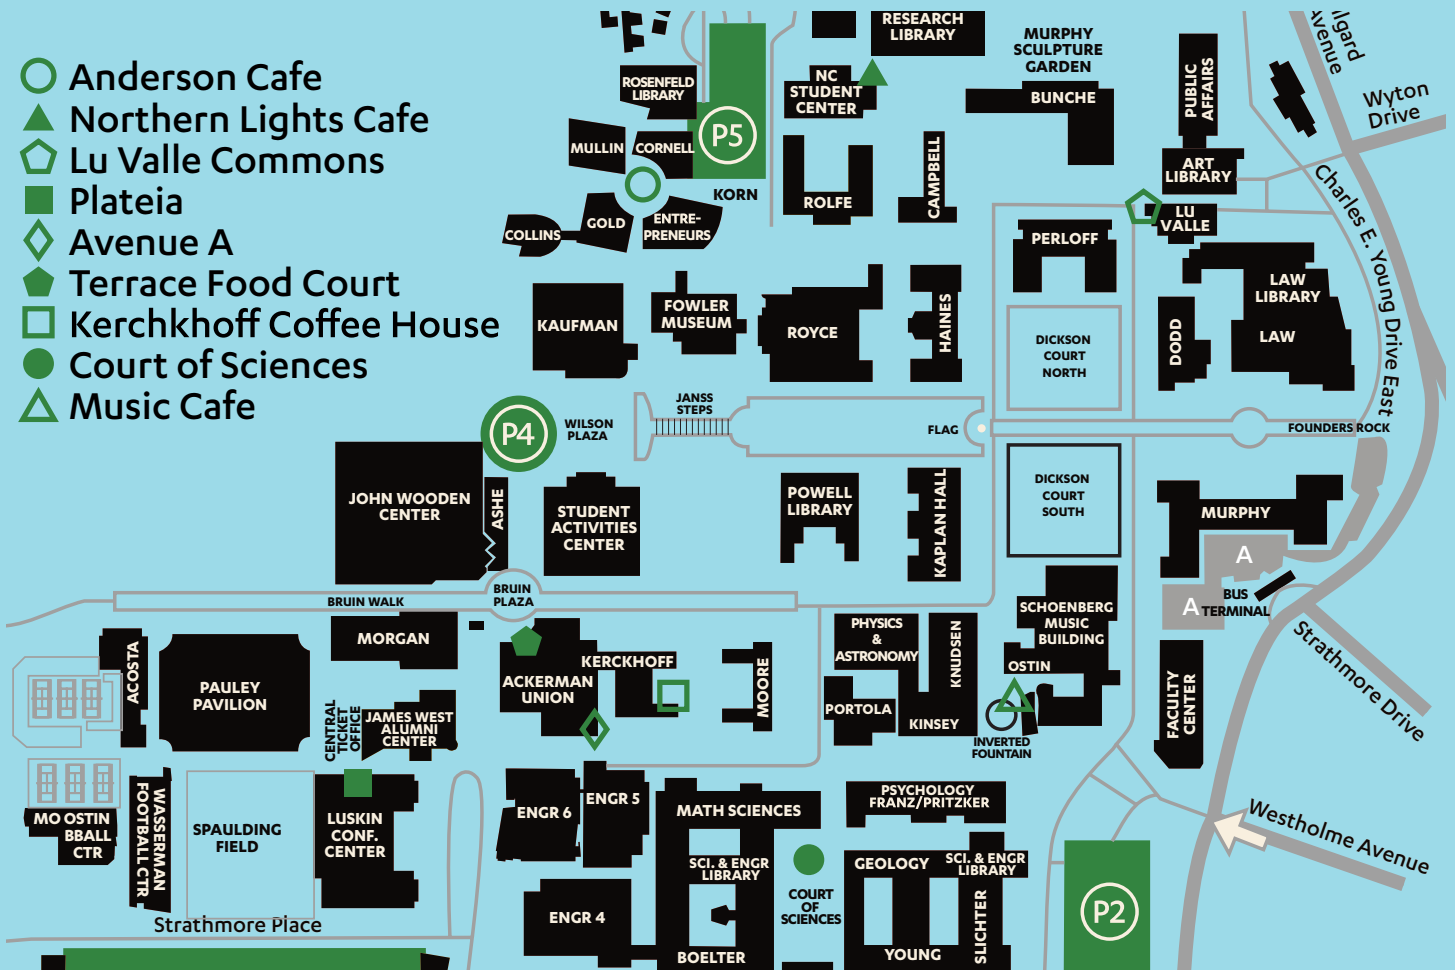

This year, the conference is held in a hybrid mode. Hybrid graduate student works-in-progress workshops and in-person panels are led by faculty moderators from our UCLA community. We’d like to thank the Friday 4/17 in-person panel moderators Sean Metzger, Alesia Montgomery, and Bharat Venkat.

We are grateful to Nhan Nguyen for designing the fabulous conference graphics.

Finally, we are fortunate to have had a creative and hardworking planning committee for the conference. We thank CSW|Streisand Center Director Jessica Cattelino; Thinking Gender 2026 Coordinator Tavi Lorelle Carpenter; Management Services Officer Rosa Chung; Program and Research Developer Katja Antoine; Administrative Specialist Eva Amarillas Diaz; and Outreach and Marketing Manager Rosie Grant. We are grateful for the contributions of our CSW|Streisand Center student assistants and researchers.
