OVERVIEW

During the 2004-2005 academic year the Center for the Study of Women continued to work within the confines of serious budgetary constraints experienced most intensely by the organized research units on campus, but increasingly felt by all sectors of the university.

The CSW continues to be in transition. Christine Littleton, Professor of Law and Women’s Studies and Chair of the UCLA Women’s Studies Programs agreed to take on the position of Interim Director for the 03-04 and was asked by Dean Waugh to stay on an additional year until a campus-wide search and adequate replacement could be found.

The search was completed in January 2005 and Kathleen McHugh, professor of English, was offered and subsequently has accepted the position as Director of the CSW. Professor McHugh will take over as Center director on August 15, 2005.

ACHIEVEMENTS

1) By far the biggest achievement for the 04-05 AY was the SUNSET REVIEW? CHRIS – THIS ONE’S ON YOU:

EXTERNAL REVIEW IS APPENDIX A
INTERIM DIRECTOR RESPONSE TO EXTERNAL REVIEW IS APPENDIX B

2) University and International Outreach:

Thinking Gender Graduate Student Research Conference: The Fifteenth Annual event was once again co-hosted by the UCLA Graduate Division and the USC Center for Feminist Research. It drew an audience of approximately 220 for its 77 presenters on such topics as “Organic Feminism Within Islamic Thought,” and “Fighting Racism while Recreating Patriarchy,” as well as what has now become an annual presentation on “How to Get an Article Published” by the co-editor of Signs.

Website: The close working relationship between the Center and the Women’s Studies Programs is also illustrated by the fact that the CSW website (www.women.ucla.edu), which is shared with Women’s Studies, continues to be maintained by CSW Administrative Specialist, Maggie Fielding. In 04-05 AY the Center added substantially to the information and links available on its section of the site.

Signs: Former CSW Directors, Professors Sandra Harding, and Kathryn Norberg, continue to co-edit the leading feminist journal, Signs, which completed its fifth and final year of operation here at UCLA in June 2005. Signs’ operating costs and incidental expenses are paid by the University of Chicago Press. These include the salaries of the Principal Editor, the Senior Editor, and the Administrative Assistant II; office machinery and supplies, telephone and other expenses. The Dean of the Social Sciences pays for two Graduate Student Researchers at 50% time and provides summer compensation and teaching release of the two Co-Editors. Signs staff handles fiscal management and Senior Administrative Analyst Van Do-Nguyen handles faculty/staff personnel and payroll. Signs officially moves to its new home at Rutgers University beginning August 15, 2005.

PROGRAMMING

The CSW calendar lists a total of 30 programs for the 2004-2005 academic year (Appendix C). The 10 events organized solely by the Center had excellent program attendance with an average of 38 undergraduate and graduate students, visiting scholars, research scholars, faculty and others per event. The Center also hosted its two annual receptions: a fall reception aimed partly at introducing new faculty to the CSW community (which drew an attendance of over 70), and its eighth annual “Meet the Authors: Book Signing and Reception” in December. (Appendix F)

Co-sponsors for the other events included: The Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Studies Program, the Office for Faculty Diversity, the School of Law, the Center for Medieval Studies, the MRG for Transnational and Transcolonial Studies, the History Department, Chicana/o Studies Department, and the UCLA Williams Project. Programs initiated by CSW decreased from 43 to 30 due in large part to the major cuts to the CSW budget. For 04-05 the permanent programming budget was reduced $39.00. Co-sponsored -sponsored lecture series included the four-part Sociology of Gender Series, now in its seventh year, (20 to 30 attendees) and the fifth year Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Studies series (40+ attendees). The CSW also co-sponsored the LGBTS Q-Grad conference. (Appendix E)

The Feminist Research Seminars offered graduate students an opportunity to earn one unit of credit each quarter by enrolling in Women's Studies 204 and attending three of the six seminars offered during the year.

This year the UCLA Law School’s Williams Project provided $5000 in funding to establish the CSW Lesbian Speaker Series to promote lesbian activism and scholarly research. This year the Center invited Pat Griffin (University of Massachusetts) and Joo-Hyun Kang (Astraea Foundation) to launch the new series.

OLD – FROM 03-04:
RESEARCH: – VAN – WHAT DID SHARON SUBMIT THIS YEAR THAT YOU AND JENNA ARE WORKING ON RIGHT NOW? During the 2004-2005, the CSW submitted 2 proposals to the National Science Foundation for Prof. Sharon Traweek’s research project on developing digital historical archives at KEK (Japan’s National High Energy Accelerator Organization) and collecting Oral Histories for the archive. Prof. Traweek (History Dept.) serves as the Principal Investigator and Prof. Anne Gilliland-Swetland (Department of Information Studies) is the Co-Principal Investigator. CSW also administered one intramural grant from the Institute for Labor and Employment (second grant of two awarded to Research Scholar Judy Branfman). (Appendix M)

UCLA FACULTY INVOLVEMENT WITH THE UCLA CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF WOMEN
During the 2004-2005 academic year, a total of 27 faculty representing 18 departments/schools served on CSW committees. Of these, 19 faculty served on the appointed CSW Advisory Committee, and 8 other faculty participated in 8 sub-committees). (Appendix H)

Over 640 faculty, most from UCLA, were on the Center’s mailing list and many attended some or many of the 30 lectures, seminars, conferences and workshops organized and co-sponsored by the Center during the year.

STUDENT INVOLVEMENT WITH THE CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF WOMEN
In 2004-2005 there were 430 graduate students representing a multitude of departments/schools on the CSW mailing list, and all of the Center’s programs were attended by a dozen or more graduate students. In addition, the Center provided the opportunity for students to serve on several of its committees, such as reading Travel Grant applications.

Once again the Center awarded a stipend, funded through the Graduate Division, to a graduate student who had the responsibility for coordinating the annual Thinking Gender conference, which was very successful and provided the student with an opportunity to acquire experience in professional development. For the third year in a row the student hired to coordinate the conference this year was also a Women’s Studies
By agreement, the CSW will continue to hire WS graduate students for this position and this reflects the Graduate Division’s new procedure of combining CSW and WSP allocations.

Eighteen students representing 11 different departments and professional schools were awarded travel grants (totaling $2,575). Out of the total, 5 received funding for research and 13 received funding for conference presentation. In order to maintain the Twin Pines fund balance (from which this award is paid) the Travel Grant committee this year decided to award a maximum of $200. One student in the department of History working on Black female intellectuals on the French colonial Empire, received the $3,000 Jean Stone fellowship, and another history graduate who studied the effects on families who migrated from China to Southeast Asia, the Americas, and Europe during the first half of the twentieth century, was awarded the $3,000 Jean Stone Fellowship. A third student from the history department received the $1,000 Wollstonecraft Award for her work on women, kinship and Burgertum in Early Nineteenth-Century Hamburg. The George Eliot prize was not awarded this year as the one submission did not meet the criteria for the award. Finally, two students were each awarded a $750.00 Constance Coiner Graduate Prize.

Thinking Gender: The Fifteenth Annual Graduate Student Research Conference was co-sponsored with USC for the twelfth year. Seventy-seven graduate students, an increase of 18 from last year, participated. Of these 77 students, 21 were from UCLA, 14 were from USC and the rest were from other campuses, including: U.C. Berkeley, U.C. Irvine, U.S. San Diego, U.C. Santa Barbara, U.C. Santa Cruz, U.C. Riverside, Loyola Marymount University, Claremont University, California State University at Northridge, California State University at Long Beach and California State University at Bernardino, California State University at Los Angeles, San Francisco State, St. Louis University, Jackson State, University of Nebraska, Brown University, University of Texas at Austin, Brandeis University, Vanderbilt University, University of Michigan, Emory University, University of Nebraska, Virginia Technical, University of Ottawa, University of North Carolina at Ashevile, Radford University, University of British Columbia, Kansas State University, New School University, and University of Zimbabwe.

Seven UCLA faculty, eight CSW Research Scholars, two CSW Visiting Scholars, two USC faculty, two UC Irvine faculty, one UC Riverside faculty, and one faculty each from California State University, Los Angeles and Antioch University, chaired the 24 panels, and approximately 240 people (an increase from last year’s 200) attended the daylong event held at the UCLA Faculty Center. This was the eighth year the Center has received $2,000 from the Graduate Division in order to help support this event in recognition of the fact that the conference serves a wide spectrum of UCLA’s graduate students, routinely drawing from over fourteen departments and two professional schools, the University of Southern California and Signs.

Faculty and Graduate Students from Other Campuses and Independent Scholars

In 2004-2005, CSW sponsored a total of five Visiting Scholars from Canada, Japan, China, the Palestinian Territory and UC Davis. It also admitted six new scholars to the Research Scholars program and renewed the applications for 34 of these independent local scholars who were given library access and are able to use UCLA as their academic affiliation. The Center hosted two luncheons for visiting and research scholars in the late summer of 2004 and in winter 2005, providing an informal setting for the presentation of work in progress.

Four Tillie Olsen awards were given to CSW research scholars. The Tillie Olsen award, a quasi-endowment by a current CSW research scholar, is to be used to support participation in scholarly conferences, travel to research sites, or the purchase of specialized research materials.

The Thinking Gender conference included a higher number of non-UCLA faculty than ever before, and also 39 graduate students from ten southern California regional campuses, four northern California campuses, a record eighteen from out-of-state campuses, and one international university, presented their research. Approximately 258 presenters and audience were from other campuses. Attendance was higher than in previous years and can be attributed to greater outreach, provided by a Call for Papers that appeared on the H-WMST Listserve, which reaches an international audience.

PERSONNEL
Career Staff:
CSW regularly employs three FTE staff (a Management Services Officer II Supervisor, a Senior Administrative Analyst and an Administrative Specialist) and a 33% FTE Director. The Senior Administrative Analyst participated in the Staff and the Academic Reduction in Time Program (START) at 75% time in fiscal year 03-04, resulting in 25% salary savings. Since the CSW/WSP administrative reorganization (1997-1998), these staff members now serve both CSW and WSP, and the two FTE staff in Women’s Studies Program, also serve the CSW. In addition, during 2004-2005, CSW employed three Graduate Student Researchers and one undergraduate work-study student.

Project-based staff:
Signs Journal Project employs one full-time Principal Editor, two 50% time Senior Editors, one full-time Administrative Assistant II and two 50% time Graduate Student Researchers.

The Center, the Center Director, and individual faculty and Principal Investigators also employ GSRs for particular projects.

PUBLICATIONS
Due to severe budget constraints the CSW published only two calendar-of-events this year – one for fall and the other for the winter/spring programs. Center activities help shape scores of publications each year in more indirect ways, inasmuch as the research and scholarship of the faculty, graduate students, and visitors involved in Center projects benefit from interaction with the Center. In order to better track such publications and following on the recommendation of the ad hoc Five-Year Review Committee, the CSW faculty advisory committee voted in the spring of 1999 to create CSW Faculty Affiliates who would agree to provide the CSW with a list of their publications each year. The high number of faculty publications at this year’s “Meet the Authors” event demonstrates the effectiveness of this strategy. (“Meet the Authors” Appendix F)

SPACE
Since 1998-1999 the Center has occupied the following space in Kinsey Hall: 288 A-C, housing the main administrative office for both CSW and WSP, the Administrative Assistant [paid by WSP] who serves the two units; the Administrative Specialist; work space for student employees; the offices of the Director and the Manager; 276 (occupied by the Senior Administrative Analyst and work-study students); and 355, the seminar/conference room, which is shared with Women’s Studies. CSW was loaned the Visiting Scholar office in Bunche 2221. On June 28th 2004 the staff and offices of the CSW and WSP were relocated to their new temporary space in Mira Hershey Hall and will remain in residence there until June 2006. The 9 offices allocated to the two units represents the first time that the CSW and WSP has had contiguous office space.

Center for the Study of Women, UCLA
15-Year External Review

This is a report on the 15-year external review of the Center for the Study of Women at UCLA conducted on January 12-14, 2005. It is submitted by a team of five reviewers: two from inside UCLA (Professor Roshan Bastani, Associate Dean of Research at the School of Public Health and Professor Jeannie Oakes, Director of IDEA and UC ACCORD in the Department of Education), and three from outside (Professor Linda Martin Alcoff, from the Philosophy Department and Director of Women’s Studies at Syracuse University; Professor Inderpal Grewal, Director and Professor of Women’s Studies at UC, Irvine; and Professor Abigail Stewart, Professor of Psychology and Women’s Studies, and former director of both the Women’s Studies Program and the Institute for Research on Women and Gender at the University of Michigan).

The different perspectives brought to the review by the team members (in terms of Women’s Studies as a field, as well as a range of disciplines, including humanities and social sciences as well as both liberal arts and professional school orientation, experience with ORUs at UCLA and elsewhere) were enormously valuable. Despite the widely-differing past experiences and perspectives, the team—after meeting with over 35 people associated with CSW, and reviewing many documents and materials—easily came to a consensual view of the Center’s value and role at UCLA. We have organized our report in terms of the specific questions that were posed to us by the Vice Chancellor for Research, because we found that they allowed us to address the issues outlined in the more general charge to all 15-year review committees.

In addition to the Vice Chancellor, who provided the Charge, the team met with the Dean of Social Sciences (by conference call), the Interim Director and staff of CSW, two past directors (Harding and Norberg), the Faculty Advisory Committee (about 10 faculty), a group of 7 UCLA faculty not on the Advisory Board but affiliated with the Center, a group of six Research Scholars, and a group of about eight graduate students from a range of fields. We drew on all of these meetings in coming to our conclusions.

1. Do CSW contributions to research justify continuing the Center for an additional 15 years?

The review committee concluded that CSW serves a vital purpose on campus and should be continued. It is nationally visible, has a distinguished history and meets important needs for fostering and supporting interdisciplinary scholarship on women and gender at UCLA among faculty and students. The Center has worked hard to incorporate faculty and students into a community of scholars, including scholars of color, and CSW provides these scholars with intellectual connections that are not available elsewhere on campus. Its research contributions include programming, fostering collaboration among faculty, and enabling research for a wide array of people on and off campus. Several graduate students and faculty made clear that the presence and distinction of CSW was pivotal to their decision to come to UCLA. There is also evidence of considerable collaboration with other units on campus, particularly in joint programming; There is also evidence that CSW has enabled other research units on campus to come into existence and has taken an interest in the growth of related research units on campus.

2. Please give examples of areas where CSW’s programs are at the forefront of the nation.

The faculty associated with CSW are spectacular. The Center itself has been in the forefront nationally in the past, though its visibility and leadership role has perhaps fallen off in the past few years, perhaps largely due to budgetary constraints. However, this national role can be reclaimed, with new leadership. CSW has played an important role in enabling new areas of study and research units to emerge and become nationally and internationally discussed—these have included LGBT studies, transnational studies, including Global South, women and science, and more.

The editorial leadership of Signs has been a signal accomplishment, both financially and substantively, drawing heavily on the faculty for the editorial board and for 5 special issues. It is important that UCLA recognize that Signs is absolutely the premiere journal in interdisciplinary women’s studies scholarship, and it is a competitive and sought-after honor to be awarded it. The editors (Professors Harding and Norberg) were past directors of CSW, and drew heavily and creatively on the CSW community of faculty and students in running the journal. For example, they brought a long list of affiliated faculty on board as Associate Editors (in the current issue, we count 23 from UCLA). They also had two paid students per year working on the journal, and five student interns each year, drawn from several UCLA departments where work is done in feminist scholarship. Harding and Norberg did a presentation each year for the Graduate Student Conference that the Center for the Study of Women organized on the topic of publishing a journal article, taking students through each step of the process as it occurs with Signs.

Also during their 5 year editing of Signs, five special issues were edited by UC faculty, four by UCLA faculty and one by UC Riverside faculty. The ones edited by UCLA faculty are as follows:

1. Valerie Smith and Marianne Hirsch on "Cultural Trauma" (Smith was at UCLA before she recently moved to Princeton).

2. Francoise Lionnet (UCLA) et al on "Development Cultures"

3. Vivian Sobchack (UCLA) and Kathleen McHugh (UCLA) on "Film Feminisms"

4. Kate Norberg (UCLA) and Sandra Harding (UCLA) on "Feminist Methodology and Social Research" (due out 7-01-06)

Signs editorial responsibility can only be awarded for one five-year term, but the UCLA group is recognized nationally for having accomplished a significant reinvigoration of the journal, fostering and encouraging cutting-edge scholarship in areas traditionally underserved by Signs. There is no doubt that the presence of Signs at UCLA brought a very high level of visibility and distinction for the past five years, and in some ways was the culmination of many years of support and leadership in CSW.

The Research Scholars Program is a unique program supporting independent scholars and integrating them into the larger academic intellectual community at UCLA. They and their work make a serious contribution to CSW, and CSW plays a vital role in the scholars’ research work. The Center could take even more advantage of this unique resource by involving the Scholars in a wider range of Center activities. For example, graduate students would benefit from interactions with the Scholars. The Scholars could also play a key role in identifying and facilitating fundraising opportunities for the Center.

3. Are there activities in the Center which are perhaps not worth pursuing or which should be phased down?

The review team concluded that CSW should sharpen its focus on research and make this priority clear in the way it documents its achievements and represents itself publicly. This includes a more systematic documentation of the scholarly products of CSW affiliated faculty, research scholars, and graduate students. We attach a listing of publications for the past five years that Dr. Regina Lark of CSW compiled at our request (Appendix 1). We believe that it does demonstrate a high level of productivity in a wide range of fields. But it is clear that documentation of this kind of activity is not routinized at the Center. We believe the Center should request annual or biennial reports on scholarly activity from affiliated scholars, and should maintain an active and up-to-date database documenting the research activities of the faculty. This will provide CSW with the basis for describing its reach and strength to potential donors, as well as in grant proposals and administrative reports.

CSW should keep its priority on research, and resist the pressure to provide service. For example, although organizing and administering the workshops the Gender Equity Summit no doubt helped build connections between CSW and the rest of campus, it consumed staff and faculty resources that could have been used to foster and support research activities, such as grant writing, unless of course the gender equity initiative involved original research done by CSW faculty.

Equally, the review team believes that programming should serve and support research purposes and the research agendas of faculty, particularly when resources are limited. Reviving the earlier models of topic-oriented working groups to organize conferences and speakers (with seed grants) would help focus attention more on scholarly work, and keep faculty engaged in setting the Center’s programming agenda. It would also incorporate new and junior faculty into the CSW and foreground their research. It would also be helpful if CSW routinely solicited input from graduate students in this process; in that way CSW could be sure it is providing graduate students with one kind of intellectual and research support.
Given the limited resources available at this time, it appeared to us that CSW might relinquish the Visiting Scholars program. This was recommended in the last review, and seems to be acceptable within the community. Moreover, the Global South project has the potential to provide a more coherent program of transnational work and perform the function that the Visiting Scholars was intended to serve.

4. Is the faculty associated with CSW of the quality, depth, and vision which will help ensure that the Center will continue to be vibrant and active in the foreseeable future?

The senior CSW faculty are the leading scholars in their fields, with extraordinary depth, quality, and vision in their own work. As individuals they are absolutely outstanding and they are producing critical scholarship in a wide range of fields. However (and we note that this is not uncommon among humanities scholars in particular), they do not seem to have a strong collective vision for CSW’s intellectual work as an ORU. Moreover, CSW leaders are extremely senior and divided in their responsibilities on campus.

It appears that few junior faculty are engaged in CSW leadership (which may, of course, be the result of appropriate protection of the time of junior scholars). However, we believe CSW must find ways to cultivate the participation of junior faculty, and their investment in the Center’s future.

The Center has made progress on expanding beyond the disciplines most often in the field, e.g., into theater and television, and the life and physical sciences. It has also made progress in including faculty and students of color. In fact there are faculty of color on the Advisory Board, and nearly half of the students with whom we met were students of color. Moreover, the students of color each pointed to specific aspects of the kind of research done in the Center that interested them (e.g., the Global South Initiative, and work in transnational feminist issues such as the Maquiladora conference). As mentioned above, we were also impressed with the strong group of Research Scholars who participate in the CSW community. It is clear that the Center has succeeded in reaching out to students and faculty of color, to graduate students more generally, and to research scholars in the community.

While we recognize that this is the sort of issue that is subject to local politics we may not understand, we suggest that the Center’s affiliated faculty consider adding “and Gender” to their name. It is clear to us that they have a broad vision of feminist scholarship in keeping with the field (e.g., to include the study of masculinity and sexuality), and it might be valuable to signal that breadth of coverage while at the same time keeping clear their emphasis on women.
5. What concrete steps should the UCLA Administration undertake to strengthen the Center?

The most important support that the administration can provide is to ensure that the new director is a visionary leader who will help the Center reclaim its intellectual leadership and focus on the cutting edge.

The position of director of CSW will only be attractive to such a leader if the administration increases resources at least to the middle range of comparable centers; new resources should include:

- Contiguous space for all of its activities and with WS, and provision of space over which CSW and WS have control; we note that the information provided in CSW’s report about square footage was not complete; we attach, as Appendix II, a revised table listing all square footage supplied to us by Dr. Regina Lark.
- Space for affiliated faculty, since the lack of faculty presence in the CSW space is problematic. This could be rotated office space; or, faculty playing a prominent role in the WS program could be housed in the space.
- Creation of faculty lines (FTE) in Women Studies so that the two units can support each other and provide a strong profile for feminist, gender and women’s research. At present, UCLA lacks a women’s studies unit which can be a coherent project – as are many such units across the country, and thus CSW ends up doing projects that are outside its research function.
- More financial support for staff positions. Sharing the staff with WS has saved costs even under budget cuts but to the detriment of both programs. For instance, we note that CSW needs to collect information on the research of its members but without additional staff resources such work cannot be routinized.
- More financial support for faculty working groups focused on substantive and emerging research areas
- Increased support for Center leadership (.3 FTE is not enough for the director; there is a need for an associate director)

While specific review of Women’s Studies is outside the scope of our mission, it is obvious that the fate and success of the Center is deeply intertwined with that of Women’s Studies. Given the way that resources, particularly FTE, flow only to departments at UCLA, the departmentalization of Women Studies seems essential for CSW’s longterm health and success.

It is equally important to provide certainty about the external search for a CSW director. It is impossible successfully to recruit an outside director under the current allocation of .5 to CSW and .5 to WS. The Center Director should have a full FTE, with a courtesy joint appointment in the appropriate department, which might or might not be Women’s Studies.

An increased staff for CSW would allow the Center to develop and routinize more compelling and complete documentation of its work, and the work of affiliated faculty. This is an important task for CSW that will enable more successful fundraising.
As part of the effort to involve the next generation of faculty in leadership roles, and thereby to ensure the future vibrancy of the center, the currently vacant Associate Director position could be filled on a rotating basis. Resources should be provided for this position, which could be filled by a faculty member in the social sciences when the director is in the humanities and in the humanities when the director is drawn from the social sciences. Or perhaps more scholars with interdisciplinary degrees or interests (and there are more and more such candidates) could provide connections between fields. In this way the leadership of the Center can be attentive to the full range of fields reflected at least at the center of women’s studies.

6. Is the level of support for the Center adequate to support its mission? How does it compare to similar other centers in the nation?

The Center has done an extraordinary job of stretching its meager resources, but that should not be taken to mean that its resources are sufficient.

This is a resource-starved center, both in terms of dollars for staff and programming and in terms of the lack of FTE in the Center and Women’s Studies that makes the generation of a coherent CSW program of research difficult. Given the talent and interests at UCLA, this situation is easily rectifiable with additional resources.

There has been a huge reduction in staff, and the merging has meant that both CSW and WS have both suffered from the reduction. The reduction in staff has limited their ability to continue the activities that have helped CSW earn its well-deserved reputation. The simultaneous development of the PhD program in WS has exacerbated the impact of the staff reduction, in that graduate advising has been absorbed by already burdened staff.

It is difficult to make comparisons across different Centers, but by nearly any standard it seems clear that this Center is under-resourced with approximately 2.5 staff FTE allocated to CSW. For example, the University of Michigan Institute for Research on Women and Gender, which is much younger than CSW (established in 1995) has 8.5 staff FTE (including the faculty director, who is .5 FTE; and a shared receptionist with WS). In addition, two faculty hold half-time tenure-track appointments in IRWG (along with departmental appointments) and one staff member holds a half-time research track appointment. These three partial FTE, along with the director, all carry responsibility for pursuing sponsored research. This core group of faculty supported by FTE and a strong staff to pursue grants has, along with many faculty with appointments only in other units, ensured a stable flow of external funding at the Institute.

This may not be the kind of Center CSW aspires to be. With its current staffing and space allocation, it could not possibly pursue an aggressive sponsored research program. It would take investment of significant resources, with a commitment for a shift in the proportion of budget responsibility over time, to enable a major program of funded research and training activity at CSW. The Center has played, and can continue to play, a significant role at UCLA and nationally without that kind of support. But a new director needs to be clear about the kind of Center UCLA aspires to have, and needs to be provided the resources to achieve that aspiration.

The Center staff had information about staffing and other demographic characteristics of Women’s Studies programs within the University of California system. We were not provided with any comparable information about centers, but drawing on our collective knowledge we do not believe that any UC campus provides the ideal benchmark for UCLA’s CSW. The Beatrice Bain Center for Research at UC Berkeley comes close with some similar programs, and it has become reenergized by housing the ORU on Sexual Cultures. However, it too has been decimated by budget cuts over the last few years. Instead we recommend that the Advisory Board or the search committee for a new director be asked to identify one or more institutions nationally that have the kind of center (in terms of composition, scale, type of activity, etc.) that UCLA is aiming for, and then use that center or centers as a benchmarking comparison over the next five years. The absence of a comparative benchmark is, we think, an obstacle to enhancing the Center’s status on campus and nationally.

7. Can you suggest ways CSW can replicate its success with Signs?

A new interdisciplinary journal in an extremely important area has recently been established: Journal of Middle East Women. We were told the journal is likely to come to UCLA. We all believe this will be an appropriate publication venture for the Center, and one that fits with the Global South Initiative, among other CSW activities. However, because it’s a new and narrower journal, it cannot have the stature of Signs. We also heard that there is some interest in developing a new journal in collaboration with the law school on Women, Law, and Feminism. This kind of activity, if it fostered linkages between liberal arts and legal scholars could be very attractive. It would be optimal if it involved other and deeper ties between scholars and students in the law school and in some fields within the CSW community (e.g., political science, history, economics, etc.).

We feel there are two different potential goals implicated by this question: one is the Center’s continued activity around publication; the other is the Center’s strong intellectual leadership role nationally (and internationally). We believe that it is useful, perhaps even crucial, for the Center to pursue both of these goals, but not necessarily with the same activities. For example, the former could be satisfied by publishing one or both of the journals mentioned above. Alternatively, the faculty could regularly produce an edited book or a special issue of a journal. A working paper series posted on the website would greatly enhance the center’s visibility.

The second goal (intellectual leadership) could be met by a major activity other than publication. For example, CSW could apply for grants from Mellon or Rockefeller or Ford to support a coherent program of scholarship and/or curriculum development or training, such as the Global South program.
8. Are there arguments for merging CSW with the WS IDP into a free-standing Department?

We believe that the notion of “merger” is complex and separate from the question of departmentalization of Women’s Studies. It seems to the review team that there are clear reasons that Women’s Studies should be a free standing department (discussed above) and there are also clear reasons that there should continue to be an autonomous CSW as an ORU. The constituencies of the two units, though overlapping, are not identical, and the functions of the two are also quite distinct. In fact, we believe it would be helpful if there were sharper clarification of leadership roles and staff assignments as the two units’ relationship evolves, though we recognize that the details will likely depend on the preferences and strengths of two particular directors. It is important, as the two units evolve, to ensure that Women’s Studies remains a lively intellectual unit, and is not relegated to a “mere” curricular or service role, since it is a coherent and vibrant field of study on its own. It is also clear that Women’s Studies doctoral students derive a number of benefits from CSW and they provide clear evidence of the importance of CSW to graduate research on campus. The research needs of faculty in CSW are also different from the needs of Women’s Studies program; it is not the case that all faculty involved in CSW are committed to the project of Women’s Studies, though they may support it. There are many areas where CSW and WS can collaborate, but there should also be some separation in their activities and functions, and WS should be free to develop research programming and activities that serve curricular, scholarly and other needs of its constituencies.

9. Comment on the effect the present Interim Director has had on the Center.

Professor Littleton has selflessly stepped into a crisis and ably kept CSW afloat. She has a deep and wide knowledge of the Women’s Studies Program and of CSW. She has used her strong entrepreneurial skills to maximize the use of very meager resources both in the Center and elsewhere on campus. She has also fostered important relationships with other campus units and the central campus administration.

We recommend that the next CSW director should

- Be a visionary leader who will help the Center reclaim its intellectual leadership and focus on the cutting edge.
- Have a vibrant program of her/his own research at the leading edge of the field. For example, given the faculty and student interests in transnational social movements, the intersection of gender, race, and sexuality; women in science and technology, the new director might be a scholar in one of these or other cutting edge areas.

UCLA Center for the Study of Women

Response to 15-Year External Review

The External Review Committee conducted a detailed review of the UCLA Center for the Study of Women (“CSW” or “the Center”), including a site visit on January 12-14, 2005. The Committee submitted an eight-page report (“the Report”) in February, addressing eight specific questions posed by the Vice Chancellor for Research. The Report was forwarded to the Dean of Social Sciences, and to the Interim Director and the CSW Advisory Committee for consideration and response. The Director and Advisory Committee discussed the Report at a special meeting in March. At that time, a search for a regular Director of CSW was ongoing.

An announcement of the appointment of Kathleen McHugh, Associate Professor of English, as Director was made on May 11, 2005. That appointment will be effective August 1, 2005. The Report was shared with the incoming Director, and has been extremely useful in preparing for the transition to a new administration of CSW. This response therefore incorporates the planning done by the incoming Director as well as the reactions of the Interim Director and Advisory Committee.

Do CSW contributions to research justify continuing the Center for an additional 15 years?

We agree with the affirmative conclusion of the Report, and with the bases for this conclusion. We are particularly pleased that the Review Committee recognized the significance of CSW for recruitment and retention of faculty and graduate students.

Please give examples of areas where CSW’s programs are at the forefront of the nation.

The Report cites three areas: the “spectacular” quality of associated faculty; the five-year editorial leadership of Signs; and the Research Scholars program. These are the same areas that we would identify as CSW’s unique strengths, especially during the last decade.

Significantly, however, the Report mentions that while “[t]he Center itself has been in the forefront nationally in the past” its overall “visibility and leadership role has perhaps fallen off in the past few years, perhaps largely due to budgetary constraints.” We want to place particular stress on this point. Devastating cuts in the Center’s budget preceded by some years the financial crisis that more recently has affected all campus centers, leaving CSW in a particularly vulnerable position when across-the-board cuts were made. Temporary funding has been forthcoming from the Dean of Social Sciences, but it is far short of making up for earlier parsimony and, by its very nature as temporary, prevents CSW from engaging in meaningful long-range planning or multi-year research initiatives.

If CSW is to regain its “national role” as the Report suggests it can, adequate permanent funding must be a priority.

Are there activities in the Center which are perhaps not worth pursuing or which should be phased down?

The Report correctly suggests that “CSW should sharpen its focus on research and make this priority clear in the way it documents its achievements and represents itself publicly.” We agree that routine documentation has been lacking, and suggest that additional staff resources should be made available in order to develop and maintain records. As part of the transition to a regular Director, the current shared staff arrangement between CSW and the Women’s Studies Programs (“WSP”) will be restructured so as to provide for separate duties and reporting lines for current CSW and WSP staff, and the addition of some staff lines on a two-year trial basis. We hope that this will result in significant gains in focus and productivity, justifying a more permanent staff allocation for the Center.

We take seriously the Report’s admonishment to “resist the pressure to provide service,” and plan to reorient the Center’s programming toward supporting the research purposes and agendas of faculty, and foregrounding the research of new and junior faculty and graduate students. We disagree, however, with the use of the Gender Equity Summit as an example of the kind of service we should avoid. First, although the Summit itself did not involve “original research done by CSW faculty,” we believe that it laid the groundwork for such involvement. Second, we have committed CSW to an ongoing Gender Equity Project which, whether or not it results in affiliated faculty undertaking research in this area, is necessary to the Center’s mission of supporting a community of scholars at UCLA.

Prior to the site visit, CSW’s Advisory Committee had already, on the recommendation of the Interim Director, decided to reconsider its Visiting Scholars Program. We have stopped soliciting or accepting applications for the program pending a thorough review of its goals and implementation. We agree that the Global South Initiative, co-sponsored by CSW and WSP, will bring transnational scholars of gender to the campus and that any future Visiting Scholars Program should be focused on the Center’s priorities.
Is the faculty associated with CSW of the quality, depth, and vision which will help ensure that the Center will continue to be vibrant and active in the foreseeable future?

We agree with the strongly positive conclusions reached in the Report concerning the senior CSW faculty (“the leading scholars in their fields, with extraordinary depth, quality, and vision”); CSW’s broad reach “beyond the disciplines most often in the field” to encompass most of the campus; the Center’s “progress in including faculty and students of color;” and the quality of our research scholars.

We also agree with the Report’s suggestion that the Center needs to “find ways to cultivate the participation of junior faculty, and their investment in the Center’s future.” Indeed, the incoming director has identified this as a major priority for her administration, and we have assigned a graduate student to gather information over the summer on recent hires to enable her to establish early contact and arrange for programming that will highlight their research interests and scholarship.

The Report also suggested that CSW consider changing its name to better reflect its “broad vision of feminist scholarship.” Similar suggestions have been considered over the years, and CSWAC revisited the question after receiving the Report. As in the past, however, we have decided to keep both the breadth and the name.

What concrete steps should the UCLA Administration undertake to strengthen the Center?

The Report lists a number of areas in which the Center has serious and long-standing needs for more resources. This cannot be over-emphasized. While Dean Waugh has committed sufficient temporary funds to persuade Dr. McHugh to accept appointment as Director, this does not address the structural deficit under which CSW has been laboring for the last decade, and which has only gotten worse in the last few years. Without permanent funding, long-range planning is impossible; long-term staffing is impossible; long-term private development is impossible.

We adopt all of the suggestions made in the Report, and will continue to request permanent commitment of:

1. space for affiliated faculty;
2. creation of faculty lines in Women’s Studies;
3. more financial support for staff positions;
4. more financial support for faculty working groups;
5. increased support for Center leadership, including an increase from the .3 administrative FTE allocation to the director, and FTE for an associate director.
In the meantime, CSW and WSP have reached an agreement whereby, with the help of temporary funding from Dean Waugh, most of the currently shared staff can be assigned to WSP and additional staff hired specifically in CSW. This two-year arrangement should, at least in the short-term, help the Center to systematize its documentation, refocus its programming and compete for institutional extra-mural research grants.

We must repeat, however, that temporary solutions will not be sufficient to allow the Center to regain its stature “at the forefront” of feminist research and scholarship. Only a significant increase in permanent resources can do that, and we call on Vice Chancellor Peccei, Executive Vice Chancellor Neuman and Chancellor Carnesale to make rebuilding CSW a priority.

Is the level of support for the Center adequate to support its mission? How does it compare to similar other centers in the nation?

See above response.

Can you suggest ways CSW can replicate its success with Signs?

The Report suggests that the Center pursue several potential avenues to increase its publications and its intellectual leadership, including one or more journals; an edited book or special issue of a national journal; web-posted working papers; foundation grants to support a program of scholarship or curricular development. All of these recommendations will be pursued in the next two years.

Are there arguments for merging CSW with the WS IDP into a free-standing department?

The Advisory Committees of both CSW and WSP have been actively discussing this and similar questions for some time. The consensus that has emerged matches that of the Report, i.e., “[T]here are clear reasons that Women’s Studies should be a free standing department . . . and there are also clear reasons that there should continue to be an autonomous CSW as an ORU.”

Comment on the effect the present Interim Director has had on the Center.

The Advisory Committee agrees with the Report’s praise for Professor Littleton’s handling of the interim, and thanks her for her service.

Prior to November 1993, unrestricted funds raised by the Center were placed in CSW’s general UCLA Foundation account #5722 or in the UC Regents Various Donors Fund #53073. Since November 1993, all solicited and unrestricted funds were placed in general fund #6167 to be used at the discretion of the Director. All other gifts have been placed in the appropriate restricted Foundation accounts. Funds were transferred from Foundation accounts to the UC Regents linking funds to offset expenses.
